RareBooksClub. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 62 pages. LC Number: KF26 . A645 2011a OCLC Number: (OCoLC)741513961 Subject: Dispersing agents -- Mexico, Gulf of. Excerpt: . . . 11 To date, none of the seafood samples analyzed for these com-pounds have concentrations that exceed EPAs and FDA guidelines ensuring seafood reaching the marketplace is safe to eat. To help support additional research, the administration has re-quested supplemental funds to support dispersant research associ-ated with the Deepwater Horizon oil spill. If appropriated, the 2 million requested by the President would allow NOAA, along with EPA and the Department of the Interior, to support research that will begin to provide a better under-standing of the short-and long-term implications to the environ-ment and human health associated with the spill and surface and undersea applications of dispersants. The dynamic nature of the Deepwater Horizon oil spill has been a challenge for many and has raised many questions. To help an-swer those questions, NOAA launched a one-stop shop for detailed, near-real-time information about the response to the Deepwater Horizon oil spill. Originally designated for respondents, the Web site www. geoplatform. gov integrates the latest data on oil spills trajec-tory, fishery-closed areas, and oil shorelines, and positions research ships into one interactive map. The launch of this public site is designed to facilitate trans-parency and communication and coordination among a variety of users from Federal, State and local responders to local community leaders and the public at large. As the response to this spill continues, the Unified Command will continually reevaluate our response strategies, actions and planning. NOAA will continue to provide scientific support to the Unified Command. I would like to assure you that we will not relent in our efforts to protect the livelihoods of gulf coast residents...
